MT. GILEAD.

The farmers are very busy sowing wheat at present.

Marie Tolle and wife of Sugardick are here visiting his brother, Gus L. Tolle, this week.

John A. P. Gooding of Mayfield is here this week, having hands with the Democratic friends.

J. R. Ellington is putting up a roof on his residence. C. R. Rose of Orangeburg is doing the work.

W. F. Browning is building a barn on his premises in this vicinity. W. H. Coryell of Orangeburg is doing the work.

Mrs. John R. Howard, after a pleasant visit to the home of her son, in Ashland, returned home last Friday. She was accompanied by Miss Mattie Ravencroft, who will be her guest for three or four weeks.

THE HORNED TOAD.

It bears a remarkable resemblance to the ancient Triceratops.

There has been considerable discussion on the subject of the horned toad, and about the curious habit of the "horned toads," found in Arizona and Mexico, of spouting blood from their eyes when disturbed. Many witnesses agree in the assertion that the little animals really do have the power of spouting. According to one observer, the blood, or liquid resembling blood, comes from little orifices just above and behind the eyes, and it appears to have a stupifying effect upon an animal covered with it.

The horned toad, says the Youth's Companion, is a strange-looking creature, and in certain ways its appearance recalls one of the most remarkable monsters that in past geological ages lived in the western part of America.

The gigantic animal, whose name means "the horned-horned," had its skull inclosed in a bony helmet on the upper part of which, over the nose, were three stout horns. The head of one of these monsters is no less than eight feet long.

When a horned toad is laid upon the head of the triceratops the resemblance is quite striking, as this little modern inhabitant of some of the sandy plains of the west was a miniature reproduction, with variations, of the wonderful beast that roamed there in ancient times.

LIGHT SLUMBER.

A Street Agent's New Method of Drawing

An exchange says that a well-dressed man, leaning against a lamp post and apparently sleeping the sleep of the just, created a great deal of interest in a busy London street the other day. He sat in a box which he had built himself.

Evidently he had suddenly overcome with drowsiness, he had placed the box on the embankment, and, sitting down upon it, had fallen asleep. To those who succeeded in getting close enough to the sleeping figure, he had displayed the fear that he might be dead.

The side of his face was exposed and betrayed no sign of intoxication. It was the judgment of every one that he was sober, in good health and in full possession of his faculties.

When the crowd became so deep as to threaten a blockade, the supposed sleeper suddenly jumped to his feet, mounted his box and, flourishing a couple of bottles over his head, exclaims:

"Now, gents, see that you are all here, I rise to a question of privilege, and after thankin' you for this most cordial reception, which I assure you will long remain upon the tablets of my memory, I wish to call your attention to my well-knowned corn and bean codman."

In trades a popular gatherer gathers as much sentiment in the other sex as a successful actor. When Benjamin Constant was selected to the academy a short time ago the women students at the Jullien studios erected a triumphal arch in front of his house, before the painter's house, and compelled him to pause beneath it and make a speech. Then when M. Constant came down the stairway to leave the house the fair students stood in double line and palm branches over his head, making an avenue for him to pass under.

A naturalist recently declared that we are wrong in ascribing unusual intelligence to animals of the ape species. "As a rule the only animal with hands, it does many trifling and patient and skillful acts, necessary that the acts of human beings are made it seem as if it is guided by intellect."

The ape is hardly more intelligent than the dog, it, indeed, he knows as much, but it is not as intelligent and does not have the same capacity for the acts of human beings as make it seem as if it is guided by intellect."

He would be surprised to make lengthy notes of this famous institution. Its name is the same as that of the school, and the name of the school is the name of the city. It is sufficient to say that the school is a school for the children of the city.

On the 1st of October, 1891, the school was opened.

John A. P. Gooding of Mayfield is here this week, having hands with the Democratic friends.

J. R. Ellington is putting up a roof on his residence. C. R. Rose of Orangeburg is doing the work.

Mrs. John R. Howard, after a pleasant visit to the home of her son, in Ashland, returned home last Friday. She was accompanied by Miss Mattie Ravencroft, who will be her guest for three or four weeks.

THE HORNED TOAD.

It bears a remarkable resemblance to the ancient Triceratops.

There has been considerable discussion on the subject of the horned toad, and about the curious habit of the "horned toads," found in Arizona and Mexico, of spouting blood from their eyes when disturbed. Many witnesses agree in the assertion that the little animals really do have the power of spouting. According to one observer, the blood, or liquid resembling blood, comes from little orifices just above and behind the eyes, and it appears to have a stupifying effect upon an animal covered with it.

The horned toad, says the Youth's Companion, is a strange-looking creature, and in certain ways its appearance recalls one of the most remarkable monsters that in past geological ages lived in the western part of America.

The gigantic animal, whose name means "the horned-horned," had its skull inclosed in a bony helmet on the upper part of which, over the nose, were three stout horns. The head of one of these monsters is no less than eight feet long.

When a horned toad is laid upon the head of the triceratops the resemblance is quite striking, as this little modern inhabitant of some of the sandy plains of the west was a miniature reproduction, with variations, of the wonderful beast that roamed there in ancient times.
